Answer three questions.

- 1 'It is important that the exercise by government of discretionary powers should be subject to judicial control.'

Discuss the main types of delegated legislation and consider whether the existing controls over such laws are sufficient. [25]

- 2 'The needs of law enforcement are likely to be best met if the courts insist upon observance of standards of fairness which commend themselves to the average sense of the community from which juries are drawn.'

– Barry J in R v Lee & Others (1950)

Explain the way in which a jury is selected for a criminal trial. Discuss critically the jury's role in the administration of justice. [25]

- 3 Of the 108 High Court judges in 2008, only ten were women, one judge was from an ethnic minority background and one judge was a former solicitor.

What shortcomings do you see in the present system of appointment to the judiciary? Can you suggest any improvements which might be made? [25]

- 4 'A flexible, non-technical approach made sense, not only as a matter of language, but also in policy terms. The mischiefs attacked by the aggravated versions of public order offences were racism and xenophobia.'

– R v Rogers (2007)

How does the judgement of the House of Lords in this case reveal the varying approaches to statutory interpretation? Is any one approach to be preferred to another? [25]

**xenophobia* can be defined as a strong or irrational fear or dislike of people from other countries.

- 5 Discuss critically the means by which Parliament, judges and other agencies contribute to the process of law reform. [25]

- 6 'Equity has little relevance to modern law.'

Consider the extent to which you would agree with this statement. [25]
